From Main Street to the street where you live, the greenest building is often the one that is already built. Historic and older buildings comprise more than half of the existing structures in the United States. Restoration and adaptive reuse of these buildings preserves the materials, embodied energy, and human capital already expended in their construction. Recycling buildings is one of the most beneficial sustainable practices, stressing the importance and value of historic preservation in the overall drive toward greater sustainability. Attend this program to meet and learn from individuals who effectively educate, plan, fund, preserve and build for notable historic locations in Southern New England.

Discussion Points

- Restoration Following Natural Disasters (Tornados, Floods, Ice)
- Rewards and Challenges of Adaptive Reuse
- Project Funding and Permitting Issues
